

Miss Gunn's

BASEMENT BAR

Miss Gunn's is more than a bar; it's a junction where Melbourne's past and present meet, blending history and imagination in a captivating embrace. For those fortunate enough to find it, it's not so much a discovery as it is an invitation—an invitation to step into a bygone era and raise a glass to the woman who once enchanted this city she called home.

The Whispered Tales

Miss Gunn's is more than just a bar; it's a place of stories. Some patrons claim to feel a presence in the room—a fleeting shadow, a faint whiff of freshly brewed tea. Staff insist it's just the ambiance, but regulars aren't so sure.

There's also a rumour that Miss Gunn wasn't merely a purveyor of tea and scones. Whispers of espionage, lost love, and secret alliances swirl around her legacy. Could she have been a spy during World War I, using the Loungers' Club as a cover? Or was she simply a woman ahead of her time, weaving mystery into her life to protect her privacy?

The Modern Pilgrimage

Today, Miss Gunn's draws a clientele as eclectic as its history: city workers seeking solace after a long day, history buffs piecing together fragments of the past, and cocktail aficionados enchanted by its unique offerings. Each visitor leaves with a sense of connection—to the city, to the station, and to the enigmatic Miss Gunn herself.

Miss Gunn's isn't just a bar; it's a junction between Melbourne's past and present, a place where history and imagination collide in the most delightful way. For those who stumble upon it, it feels less like a discovery and more like an invitation—an invitation to step back in time and toast to the woman who continues to captivate the city she once called home.

The Exposed Bluestone Foundation

The bluestone here at Miss Gunn's is a piece of Melbourne's history, sourced from the same Victorian bluestone that shaped the city's early infrastructure. Quarried from basalt lava flows in Victoria's western plains, this material was widely used in the construction of Flinders Street Station and other iconic landmarks in the late 19th and early 20th centuries.

Known for its strength and durability, bluestone formed the original foundations of Melbourne's railway network, providing a solid base for platforms, bridges, and public buildings. Here, it remains a lasting connection to the city's past—where history meets modern hospitality.

A tribute to Melbourne's heritage, built to stand the test of time.

Miss Gunn's Hidden Legacy

In the bustling heart of early 20th-century Melbourne, Flinders Street Station was more than a gateway to the city—it was a vibrant epicentre of culture, commerce, and camaraderie. Amid the clatter of trains and the chatter of commuters, there existed a quiet refuge known as The Loungers' Club.

Nestled in an unassuming corner of the station, this establishment was the domain of a woman known only as Miss Gunn.

Miss Gunn was a figure of quiet authority and undeniable charm. Clad in her crisp white apron, she served weary travellers with cups of tea and scones baked with care, her establishment offering an oasis of calm amidst the city's hustle. Local newspapers spoke of her warmth and discretion, though her full story remained a mystery. Was she a widow, an heiress, or simply a woman with an indomitable spirit? The truth, like the woman herself, was elusive.

The Transformation

Fast forward over a century, and Flinders Street Station has changed dramatically. Behind its historic façade lies a network of forgotten rooms and passageways, including one particularly enigmatic space—a room below what we now know as Clocks at Flinders, once rumoured to be a morgue. Few knew it existed, and fewer dared explore it.

But someone did. And that someone claimed to have uncovered an artifact from around Miss Gunn's time: a delicate silver teapot, inscribed with a simple G. This discovery became the catalyst for the resurrection of Miss Gunn's spirit—this time, in a venue as discreet and mysterious as the woman herself.

The original "Loungers' Club" established by Ada Gunn in the basement of Flinders Street Station.
